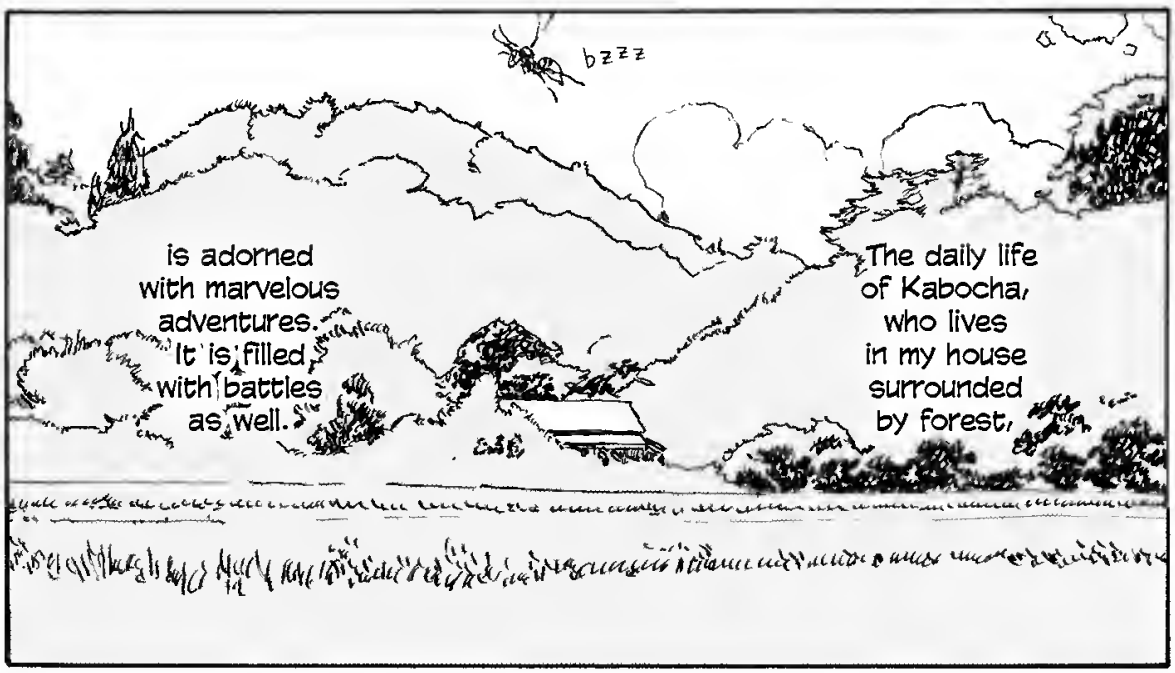
Kabocha's Triple Bout



bzzz
The daily life of Kabocha, who lives in my house surrounded by forest, is adorned with marvelous adventures. It is filled with battles as well.

What's she doing?
One morning Kabocha was on top of a chestnut tree in the back.
Ah!

But the squirrel was below the cat...
It was trying to find a window of opportunity to slip by the cat.
The squirrel was calm and collected even on the vertical trunk.
and looked impatient.
Kabocha didn't move from the branch.
Why doesn't it just drop to the ground and run away?

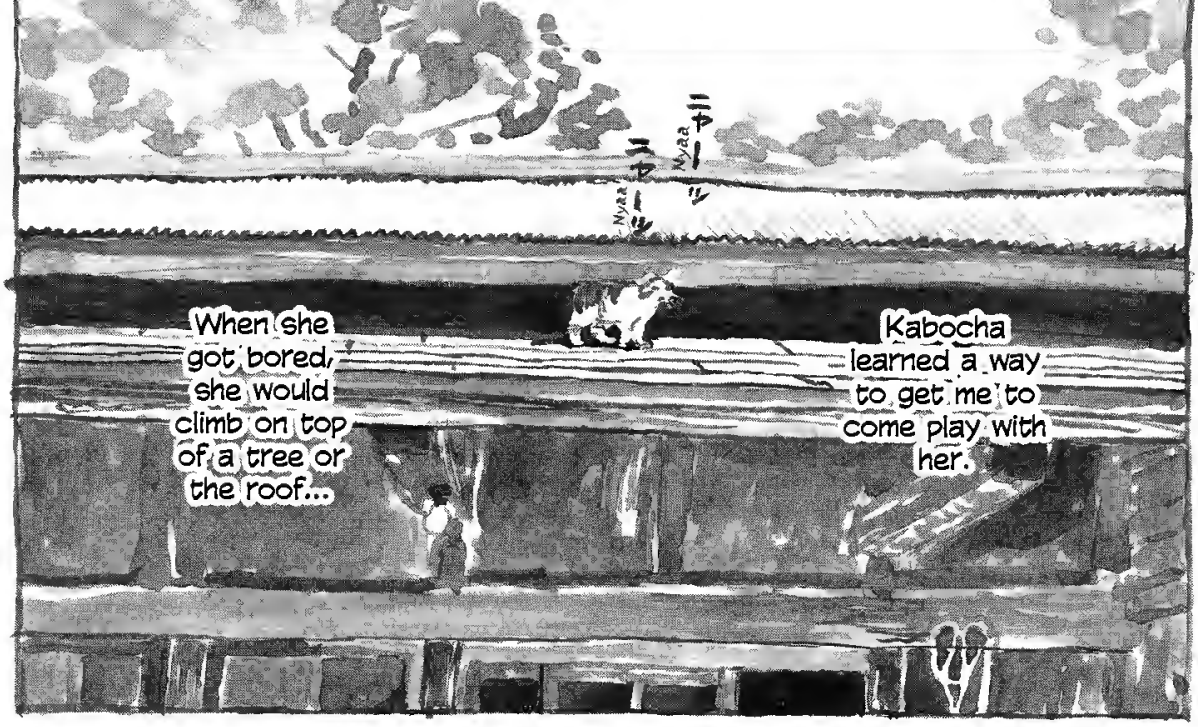
Kabocha VS. Me
Take a look at this, Kabocha!
Around a year after I started living like this...



Nyaa
Nyaa
When she got bored, she would climb on top of a tree or the roof...
Kabocha learned a way to get me to come play with her.

Nyaa
Nyaa
When we first moved to the mountain it sounded like she desperately needed my help and I would go and rescue her every single time.

and she would cry like she was extremely scared of something.
She's up to it again...

But once, I witnessed her casually climb down on her own from the scene of the crime, and then I realized that she was just putting on a performance to try to attract my sympathy.
S-She's just messing with me...

It's a battle of wills.
Once she gets hungry she'll come down...
Nyaa Nyaa
I'll just ignore her. I need to just teach her a lesson.

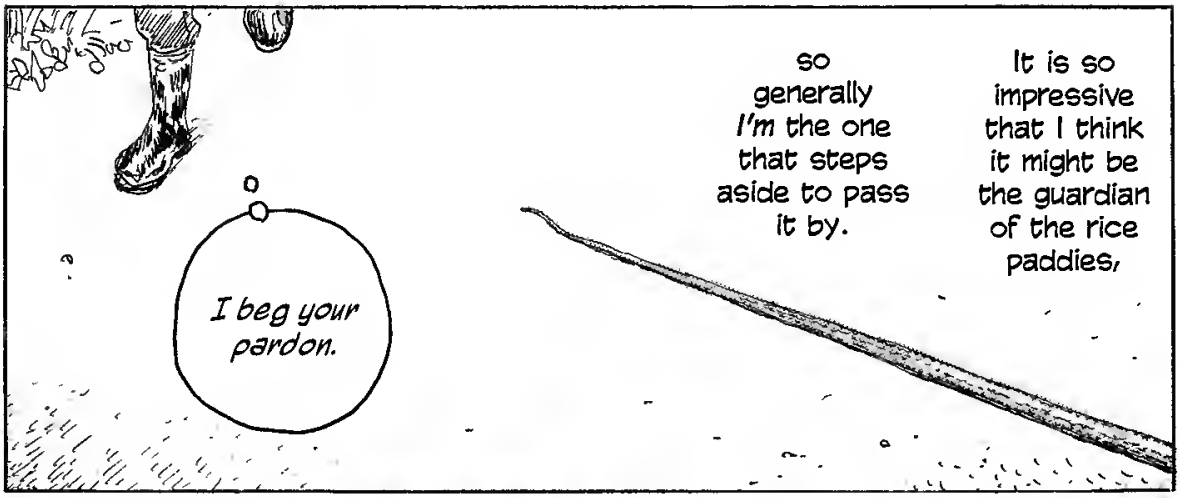
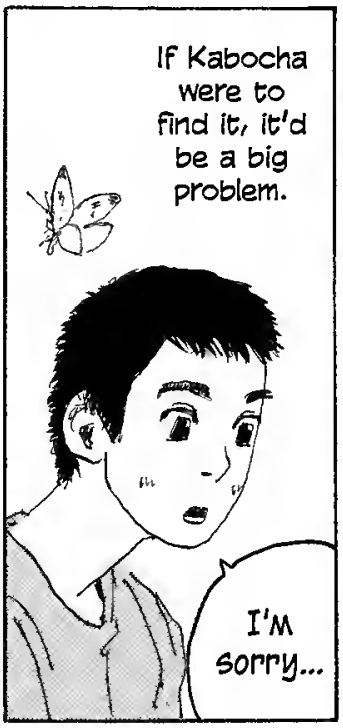
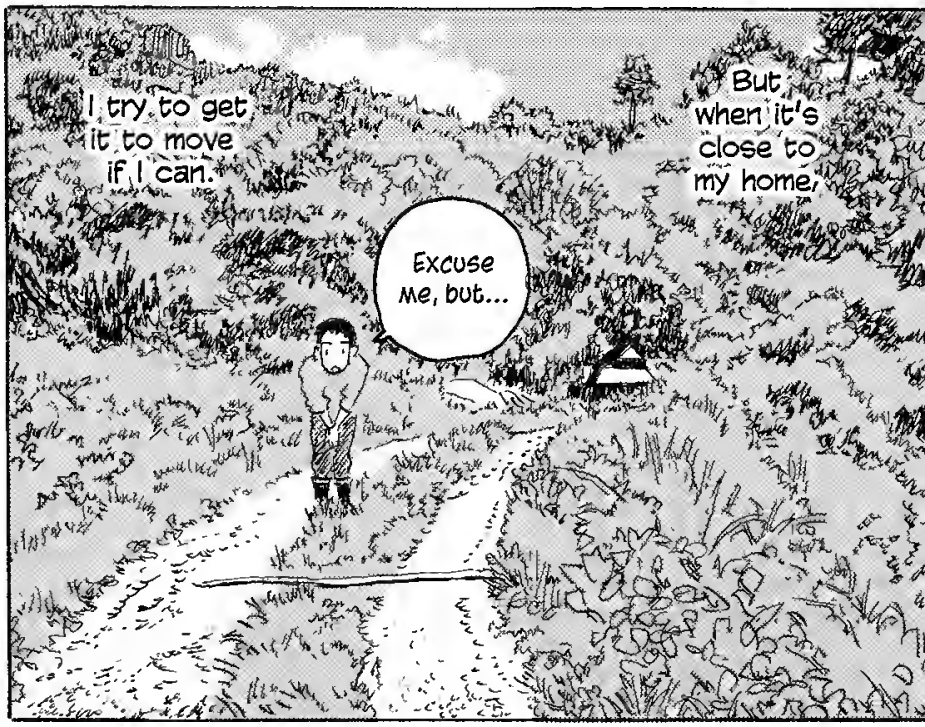
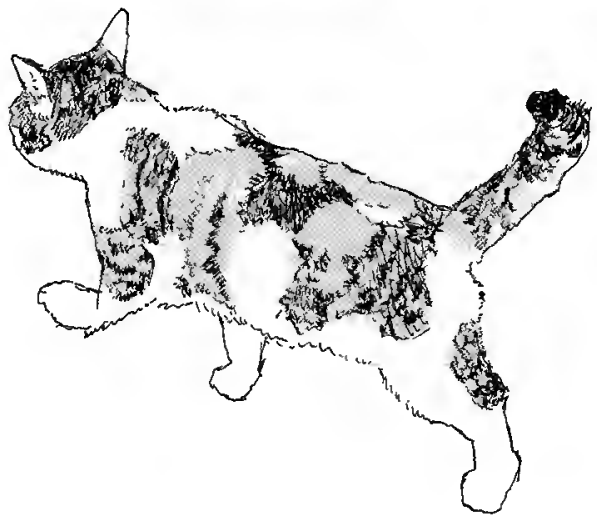
I think it was basking in the sun.



I beg your pardon.
so generally I'm the one that steps aside to pass it by.
It is so impressive that I think it might be the guardian of the rice paddies,







But I'm afraid she'd let that get to her head and even try to take on a viper later, so...

Rat snakes are not poisonous, so she would probably be fine even if she took a swing at it.
